

I'd like you to meet my cats, Sissy and Frank. They're sisters from the same litter of barn cats that lived on a dairy farm. I've had Sissy and Frank a little more than three years—since they were kittens. When I picked the girls up, I was told by the farmer that one cat was a girl and one was a boy. As it turns out, the vet that spayed them could tell their sex more accurately, so now one of my girls has a boy's name.

Personality and activity

Sissy and Frank are best friends. They like to sit in their cat tree together and watch the birds outside on the feeders, play with their toys, and they go crazy for catnip. They're very friendly cats, love to cuddle and purr, and may rub up against you when they meet you. It's their invitation to pet them.

At night, Sissy and Frank are active, roaming the apartment—I guess it's their natural hunting instinct. They're not loud talkers, though. They'll meow sometimes during the night and when they're happy, but they don't howl or make a lot of noise.

Behavior

Both cats are litter boxed trained and I clean their boxes daily. I provide each cat a cat tree to sleep and relax in, but mostly, they cram into one space or lay together on the bed. They will scratch their claws on the scratching post and carpet pieces attached to the cat tree, but I've never seen them scratch a carpeted floor.

Sissy and Frank are not real fond of other dogs or cats they don't know. They may hiss and puff up their tail fur, but they avoid confrontation—they're lovers, not fighters. But they're not allowed to go outside, so it's not usually a problem.

Medical information

Sissy and Frank are both in good health. I take them to Loving Care animal hospital annually for routine shots and wellness exams. They are current on their FVRCP feline vaccines, rabies shots and are licensed.

Please let us come live in your wonderful apartment. We would all love to be there and we make great neighbors!
